THE NEW GIRL.

"Now, Charlie, you'll be sure to remember."

"To remember—what?" said Mr. Meredith, with a helpless expression of insanity.

"To remember," said Charlie, "that I dropped both hands despairingly at her side."

"Charlie!" she exclaimed, "you don't mean that you have forgotten already?"

"My dear," said Mr. Meredith, "I am not a forgetful man. I may not have forgotten, but I don't seem exactly to remember."

"The oyster!" suggested the wife.

"Yes," said Mr. Meredith, "the oyster."

"And two ounces of double zephyr scattered wool."

"Exactly."

"And the deposit-back to be waiting at two o'clock for your cousin from Chicago."

Mr. Meredith slipped one hand on the table.

"She is coming to-day. I declare to goodness!" he ejaculated.

"And a dozen Havana oranges for dessert, and two pounds of white grapes, and some of those delicious little Naples biscuits and macaroons, from Baltimore—oh, and let them send me up a girl from St. Ober."

"A—which?"

"A girl, a good girl for general housework. I should want home this morning with the faceache, and I can't be left alone with company coming, and all. Mind she is a good cook and understands waiting at table."

"And Mr. Meredith rushed off to catch the non-thirty express with a kaleidoscope confusion of grapes, zephyr wool, deposit backs, oysters and servant-maids creaking through his brain, which boded ill for Mrs. Meredith's domestic plans.

While that lady, clasping both hands over her forehead in a sort of tragic despair, rushed down into the kitchen, where a very good-looking young man of some two or three and twenty was on his knees in front of the range, trying to coax a most unwilling fire to burn. The good-looking young man glanced up with a comical sparkle in his eye and a smear of soot traversing the bridge of his nose.

"Tom," said Mrs. Meredith, hysterically, "can you make a lobster salad?"

"Like a book!" said Tom.

"And coffee?"

"I learned in Paris."

THE HISTORY OF HIS ROMANCE TO THE LONE STAR RIVER.

Fort Smith (Ark.) Elevator.

During Sam Houston's residence in the Cherokee nation, west of Arkansas, he lived with a daughter of old Captain John Rogers, an Indian, between Grand or Neosho river and Verdigris river about two and a half miles west of Fort Gibson. He was merchandising, but tried to conform to the ways and habits of the Indians, and in dress wore the hunting shirt, buckskin leggings and the breechcloth of the Indians. For the greater part of his stay here he was under the influence of liquor, and he was a very bad man. He was seldom without it. He seemed, after a residence of about two years, to tire of the part he was acting, and during short periods of sobriety, became more and more sullen. He was evidently comparing in his mind, the present, made of life with the past, or a worthless, drunken white Indian with the proud Governor of Texas.

It was directly after some of his long drunken spells that some of the Texas Cherokees brought news of the war between Texas and Mexico. Houston, although not yet sober, walked out on the banks of the Grand river with John Henry, a merchant, throwing himself down on the ground he was silent for some time. At length, starting up quickly, he said, "Henry, let us go to Texas. I am tired of this country and this life. Go with me, and I will make a fortune for both. You are a big merchant. Make a big merchant. We are no more fit for merchants than hell is fit for a powder-house. I am going. In that new State I will make a man of myself again." He at once began making preparations for the trip, and at that time, long before the war, he came out dressed as a white man, and after refusing the liquor offered him frequently, as if by the stroke of the magician's wand, he looked the man and here he very soon became after his arrival in Texas.

THE ENGINE.

Into the gloom of the deep dark night,
With panting breath and a startled
Swift as a bird in sudden flight
Darts this creature of steel and steam.

Awful dangers are lurking nigh,
Rocks and chasms are near the track,
But straight by the light of its great white eye
It speeds through the shadows dense and black.

Terrible thoughts and fierce desires
Trouble its mad heart every an hour,
Where burns and smolder the hidden fires
Coupled ever with might and power.

It hates, as a wild horse hates the rein,
The narrow track by vale and hill;
And shrieks with a cry of stifled pain,
And longs to follow its own wild will.

Oh, what an engine shod
With muscle and flesh by the hand of God,
Speeding on through the dense, dark night,
Guided only by the soul's white light!

Often and often my mad heart tires,
And hates its way with a bitter hate,
And longs to follow its own desires,
And leave the end in the hands of fate.

O, ponderous engine of steel and steam;
O, human engine of flesh and bone,
Now the white light's certain beam,
There lies safety, and there alone.

The narrow track of fearless truth,
Lit by the soul's great eye of light,
O, passionate heart of reckless youth,
Alone will carry you through the night.

THE NEW GIRL.

"Now, Charlie, you'll be sure to remember."

"To remember—what?" said Mr. Meredith, with a helpless expression of insanity.

"To remember," said Charlie, "that I dropped both hands despairingly at her side."

"Charlie!" she exclaimed, "you don't mean that you have forgotten already?"

"My dear," said Mr. Meredith, "I am not a forgetful man. I may not have forgotten, but I don't seem exactly to remember."

"The oyster!" suggested the wife.

"Yes," said Mr. Meredith, "the oyster."

"And two ounces of double zephyr scattered wool."

"Exactly."

"And the deposit-back to be waiting at two o'clock for your cousin from Chicago."

Mr. Meredith slipped one hand on the table.

"She is coming to-day. I declare to goodness!" he ejaculated.

"And a dozen Havana oranges for dessert, and two pounds of white grapes, and some of those delicious little Naples biscuits and macaroons, from Baltimore—oh, and let them send me up a girl from St. Ober."

"A—which?"

"A girl, a good girl for general housework. I should want home this morning with the faceache, and I can't be left alone with company coming, and all. Mind she is a good cook and understands waiting at table."

"And Mr. Meredith rushed off to catch the non-thirty express with a kaleidoscope confusion of grapes, zephyr wool, deposit backs, oysters and servant-maids creaking through his brain, which boded ill for Mrs. Meredith's domestic plans.

While that lady, clasping both hands over her forehead in a sort of tragic despair, rushed down into the kitchen, where a very good-looking young man of some two or three and twenty was on his knees in front of the range, trying to coax a most unwilling fire to burn. The good-looking young man glanced up with a comical sparkle in his eye and a smear of soot traversing the bridge of his nose.

"Tom," said Mrs. Meredith, hysterically, "can you make a lobster salad?"

"Like a book!" said Tom.

"And coffee?"

"I learned in Paris."

THE HISTORY OF HIS ROMANCE TO THE LONE STAR RIVER.

Fort Smith (Ark.) Elevator.

During Sam Houston's residence in the Cherokee nation, west of Arkansas, he lived with a daughter of old Captain John Rogers, an Indian, between Grand or Neosho river and Verdigris river about two and a half miles west of Fort Gibson. He was merchandising, but tried to conform to the ways and habits of the Indians, and in dress wore the hunting shirt, buckskin leggings and the breechcloth of the Indians. For the greater part of his stay here he was under the influence of liquor, and he was a very bad man. He was seldom without it. He seemed, after a residence of about two years, to tire of the part he was acting, and during short periods of sobriety, became more and more sullen. He was evidently comparing in his mind, the present, made of life with the past, or a worthless, drunken white Indian with the proud Governor of Texas.

It was directly after some of his long drunken spells that some of the Texas Cherokees brought news of the war between Texas and Mexico. Houston, although not yet sober, walked out on the banks of the Grand river with John Henry, a merchant, throwing himself down on the ground he was silent for some time.
